Engagement Rings

Engagement Ring Mistakes to Avoid: Common Pitfalls and How to Dodge Them.

Engagement Rings are a symbol of love and commitment. They're also expensive—so expensive that many couples are scared to make the wrong choice. The good news is that there are plenty of things you can do to ensure your ring will stand out from all the rest: from choosing the right diamond (you already know how important this is), to ensuring it's insured against damage during shipment, and even planning an engagement proposal over another special occasion without telling her beforehand!

CHOOSING A DIAMOND BASED ON COST RATHER THAN QUALITY.

One of the biggest mistakes a woman can make is to choose a diamond based on cost rather than quality. A better choice would be a perfect cut, which means that it has no flaws or blemishes and is free from any inclusions (small particles inside the stone). A poor cut may have some noticeable flaws, such as small pits or cracks that detract from its appearance.

BUYING A RING WITH A GEMSTONE THAT'S TOO LARGE OR SMALL.

When you're Buy Engagement Rings, it's important to keep in mind that the size of your stone will affect its value. If your gemstone is too small or large for what you want, then it can make for a less than ideal fit.

- Too Small: A small gemstone on an engagement ring is like wearing a child's size 4 shoe--you may get away with it at first but eventually they'll give out on you and cause blisters!
- Too Big: Bigger isn't always better either--if your fiancee has really long fingers or she likes wearing gloves while doing housework (or both), then this might be something they'd prefer not too much attention drawn toward their hands which would make finding jewelry difficult later down the road when she starts getting into things like gardening etcetera..
