

Creating a Strong Introduction & Conclusion for Your Dissertation Guide-2022

In dissertation writing, I must say the most important chapters are the introduction and conclusion because they leave an impression on the reader. An introduction is the first thing that a reader interprets in your paper, whereas a conclusion is the last part they read. So, both should be strong enough to engage the reader. An essay writer knows all about it and follows the guidelines carefully.

To help you with writing a convincing dissertation, I have mentioned below the key features of a compelling and strong introduction and conclusion.

Strong Introduction

You should keep editing the introduction.

You come up with a strong introduction when you refine it several times. If you want to compose a strong introduction for your research paper, it is better to start writing at the time of your proposal. Do not wait for approval. When you are submitting your research proposal, write a compelling introduction to make the supervisors believe that your research is worthy of reading.

If you are not really clear about your research idea, develop a rough draft of the introduction part and keep editing it as your ideas develop. This way the introduction will keep your research on track. Some people leave the introduction for the end due to which they often lose track. You can never write a convincing research paper if your introduction does not match with the overall research idea or research results.

Provide background information.

Being a student and an experienced essay writer, you must know that the introductory paragraph of any academic paper is incomplete without stating the background knowledge of the topic that you have selected. For this purpose, you need to adopt a general to a specific approach. First, you will generally explain the field in which you are conducting the research then you will explain the topics.

After discussing the topic, briefly mention the literature on your topic to highlight the gap that you will be filling with the help of your research.

Strong thesis statement.

There is no doubt in the fact that a strong introduction is one that contains a stronger thesis statement. If you don't know what a thesis statement is, you can never write an effective introduction for your research paper. A thesis statement is a claim that contains the whole idea of your research. As I said earlier, a thesis should be strong, but it does not mean that it should be complex. If it is complex, your reader will not be able to grasp the concept behind your dissertation.

If you think you cannot write an effective thesis statement, you can handover your task to an online writer. When I was in college, I paid a writer to 'write my essay' online. So, I can obtain high grades.

Strong conclusion

If you are trying to write a strong conclusion as well, a professional essay writers make sure it contains the following elements.

Brief summary.

The concluding paragraph of your dissertation should contain a summary of all the key points that you have discussed earlier. Besides this, briefly discuss the key findings that the data analysis provided.

Discuss the conclusion.

After the findings, it's time to have a short discussion on the conclusion that you have drawn from your research. It is essential for you to discuss the results in the introductory paragraph to inform the readers that you are leading towards the completion of your dissertation.

Significance of your research.

Now that you are done with explaining the results, redefine the importance of your research, tell the readers how your research has contributed to the field. Point out the gap that was left out by the previous researchers.

Provide recommendations.

One of the rules for the dissertation conclusion is to provide recommendations for future researchers who can explore the same topic but from a different lens. So, if you have finished explaining your research, highlight its limitations. Be honest while writing about the downsides of your research.

For better results, work with a 'write my paper' service and get the desired results.